- Attrition has flattened out on an annualized basis during Q3 and fresher hiring should offset problem in the medium term
- Core services (42% of revenue) was stable during Q3 and the decline has stalled and may see slight uptick which is a very positive indicator as peers' core business are still shrinking. Company still needs to work on its automation capabilities which, if executed appropriately, will improve outlook for the future in the Core Business.
- Subcon costs are high (at 11%) as demand is vibrant and company does not want to leave anything on the table. Going ahead, subcontracting costs can be a good cost optimization lever as some will elapse, some company will others will be lost to lateral hire and balance maybe rehired.

Infosys reported a strong topline growth coupled with healthy deal wins during Q3. Margins were softer than our expectations – mainly due to compensation hikes and subcon costs due to the ongoing supply crunch. Going ahead, management has indicated that levers such as reduced subcon costs and better pricing due to digital component should aid margins to remain in the comfort band of 22-24%

Valuation & Outlook

Infosys is currently trading at 30.6x / 27.3x FY23e/FY24e EPS respectively. The company delivered strong revenue growth coupled with deal wins. This is also the 3rd consecutive quarter in which the company has upgraded its growth guidance – which is an indication of the robust demand in the sector. We are not only impressed with the company's performance in the Digital segment, but also with how the company has managed to arrest de-growth in the core business (in which the peers are still struggling). This has enabled Infosys to consistently deliver industry leading growth for 3 consecutive sectors. As far as margins are concerned, management indicated that company has levers such as Subcon costs, higher pricing and automation to counter wage inflation and post COVID travel and facility costs. Taking the above factors into consideration, we maintain our BUY on Dips rating with a revised target price of INR 1,987 (earlier 1,775), i.e. 29x FY24e EPS.
